

Hockey stars to hit the diamond

Nine hockey stars have promised to trade in their sticks for baseball bats Saturday in the sixth annual Greenfield Park-Mackay Centre charity softball tournament.

Past and present National Hockey League players Gump Worsley, Corey Foster, Bruce Cassidy and Jeff Chychrun have all promised to take part in a friendly exhibition game Saturday at 12:30 p.m. against the tournament's organizing committee.

St. Lambert native Steve Kasper, centre with the Los Angeles Kings, Greenfield Park native Garry Galley, defenceman for the Boston Bruins, and defenceman Luke Richardson of the Toronto Maple Leafs had earlier announced they would take part in the exhibition game. So will junior hockey stars Steve Bisson and Mike Dagenais.

The tournament, which pits 32 teams including The Gazette's editorial softball team, will be held at Pierre Laporte Park in Greenfield Park.

The slo-pitch tournament final, with the Michael Reid Memorial Trophy going to the winner, will be held Sunday.

Gump Worsley Former NHL goalie to swap stick for bat

Past tournaments have raised about $55,000 for the Mackay Centre for deaf and crippled children.